Opioid overdose deaths climb: DPH

Data show overdoses killed 684 in Massachusetts in the first half of 2015.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS
spencer.buell@metro.us

As the many-headed beast of opioid addiction continued to ravage Massachusetts, another grim statistic was announced: 684 overdose deaths in the first half of 2015.

The number from the Department of Public Health, released Wednesday, put the state on pace to see deaths mirroring last year's figure: 1,089 deaths in 2014, 87 of them in Boston (that number could still be revised upward by as many as 199 deaths by the state's medical examiner). The most recent data show an increase in deaths by nearly 7 percent over the same period last year.

"... We need to use every tool at our disposal to fight back against this public health crisis ..."
Baker

"This data reminds us that we need to use every tool at our disposal to fight back against this public health crisis, which continues to have a drastic impact in all corners of the commonwealth," Gov. Charlie Baker said in a statement. "Our proposed legislation introduces much-needed reforms to create new pathways to treatment and help us fight the deadly opioid epidemic."

Last Thursday, Baker debuted an opioid-focused legislative package which, among other measures, would restrict the number of opioid pain pills doctors can prescribe and provide new ways to commit an addict to treatment against their will.

OVERDOSE DEATHS IN 2014 SAW AN INCREASE OF 63 PERCENT OVER 2012

20%
AND A 20 PERCENT INCREASE OVER 2013.

The release of the overdose death data this week came before Baker planned to meet with law enforcement officials to discuss the state's opioid crisis Thursday afternoon.

Opioid abuse had emerged as a priority of Baker's administration, spurring the formation of an opioid working group which in June released 65 recommendations targeting state medical, drug treatment and law enforcement communities. Also in June, the state committed $800,000 to an opioid abuse public awareness campaign.

Fighting overdoses

One method of curbing overdose deaths that has taken hold among first responders had been naloxone (better known as Narcan), a nasal spray that counters the effects of an overdose. The DPH this year launched a pilot Narcan-distribution and education program.

In August, the state negotiated an agreement to make bulk purchases of Narcan from drugmaker Amphastar Pharmaceuticals.

Though concentrated in cities, overdose deaths as counted by the DPH last year showed a tally of victims from suburbs around the state. Activists and nonprofits calling attention to abuse have noted that addiction to painkillers, heroin and other opioids had been felt among families spanning economic backgrounds.

Flowing with elegance.

Bruins' new Boston practice rink topped off

The Warrior Ice Arena plans to welcome the B's next year.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS

It was a ceremonial welcome for the Warrior Ice Arena on Thursday as the under-construction Allston-Brighton arena moved closer to welcoming the Boston Bruins.

Construction was underway at the 75,000-square-foot rink, which would soon serve as the B's new practice facility and be a centerpiece of a massive mixed development run by New Balance, the local shoe and athletics giant.

The rink was slated to open in fall 2016. The Bruins now practice at the Ristuccia Memorial Arena in Wilmington.

"Since joining the Bruins in a front office capacity, a goal of mine has been to move the Bruins into a first-class practice facility, and this agreement moves us closer to accomplishing that goal," Bruins president Cam Neely said in a July statement about his intent to sign a lease with developers.

New Balance's development arm, NB Development Group, had ambitious plans for the 15-acre stretch of former industrial property along the Mass Pike and on Boston's outer edge. There is the oddly shaped New Balance headquarters, which opened in September, but under construction were an indoor track facility, a hotel, apartments, a commuter rail stop, office space and planned storefronts with an athletic bent.

On a tour of the New Balance building last month, a developer spokeswoman said the area would constitute a neighborhood to be dubbed "Boston Landing." Erin Harvey, leasing and marketing manager for the development group, called it the city's next "health and wellness district."

City officials gathered with members of New Balance and the Boston Bruins on Thursday to join with construction crews for the topping off ceremony of the new Bruins practice facility at "Boston Landing." NICOLAUS CZARNECKI

Stabbing at Jackson Square T stop
The Jackson Square T stop was closed for more than an hour and a half on Thursday as police investigated a reported stabbing.

The victim, identified as a 17-year-old man, was being treated with life-threatening injuries, police said.

The incident was first reported at the Orange Line stop in Jamaica Plain at 3:20 p.m., the station closed at 3:42 and re-opoened at 5:18, according to police and the MBTA.

Commuters on social media earlier expressed frustration with the T over delayed service.

Last week, an afternoon shooting shut down Forest Hills station. No injuries were reported in that incident. METRO

Dippin' Donuts owners fined $47,000
Two Dippin' Donuts franchise owners have been fined close to $47,000 for child labor and tips violations.

Fernanda and Hilario Delgado, owners of the chain's locations in Leominster and Littleton, were ordered to pay $15,000 in restitution and close to $32,000 in penalties, Attorney General Maura Healey announced Thursday.

The couple skimmed more than $15,000 in tips meant for employees, and regularly scheduled teenagers under 18 to work past 8 p.m., and once before 6 a.m., Healey said in a release. The violations dated back to 2012. METRO

Police arrest teen who brought gun to school
Police stopped a Boston teenager who attempted to bring a loaded handgun to school on Thursday.

The suspect, a 15-year-old student at TechBoston Academy, was carrying a .32 caliber handgun in his backpack, police said.

The school's dean of discipline, John Evans, told police the teen arrived late to school and tried to bypass the metal detectors at the school's entrance, according to a police report.

When officers spotted the gun in the boy's unzipped backpack, the teen fled, then resisted arrest, police said.

The teen, who is from Dorchester, was arrested and charged with unlawful possession of a firearm and ammunition and resisting arrest.

"There is never a good reason to bring a gun to school. Illegal guns have no place on our streets and certainly not in the hands of a child," said Boston Police Commissioner William Evans in a statement. "Thanks to the keen observations and quick actions of the school police officers and administrators, a potential tragedy was avoided and one less gun is on the streets." METRO

App makes kids want to eat healthy

KickinNutrition blends funny videos, social networking and a 3D video game to reach kids on good nutrition.

SPENCER BUELL
@MetroBOS

Celtics player Jared Sullinger poses at a Kickin Kitchen event. PROVIDED

Getting kids to ditch junk food and eat healthy is no easy task.

According to one local company, though, the way to children's stomachs is through their iPads.

"The first place they go when they have a question is the Internet," said Natasha Lance Rogoff, CEO and founder of Somerville's KickinNutrition. "My son is obsessed with food, and I just thought there should be a way to shoot new videos, create interactive opportunities for kids to share content based on eating really great food."

Rogoff's company, headquartered at Tech Hub in Somerville, recently partnered with Apple and plans to demo its platform at the computer giant's store on Boylston Street this evening.

There is a lot of digital bridge-building baked into KickinNutrition's flashy system: a 3-D adventure game (cook a robot a healthy meal, re-stock a food pantry) and a social network on which kids can chat about health food. There was even a related campaign that asked families to send in pictures posing with nutritious eats: #HealthySelfie2015.

Plus, there are comedy videos centered on characters who cook and eat healthy foods. They feature Boston-area actors, and some were shot on-site at a school in Roxbury. Some have celebrity cameos, like Celtics power forward Jared Sullinger. In a future episode, Rogoff said, look for a yet-to-be-announced star of Netflix's "Orange Is the New Black."

> "It's got kind of an edgy feel to it. It's not boring."
> Rogoff

"It's a similar format to a sitcom like 'Hannah Montana' or other Disney or Nickelodeon sitcoms, except it's got an educational component to it," said Rogoff. She used to be an executive director for Sesame Street. "It's got kind of an edgy feel to it. It's not boring."

And it works, researchers say.

Studies from Boston University suggested the program made kids in test schools change their eating habits for the better, she said. An advisory board of public health and nutrition experts at Harvard and Tufts also helped develop KickinNutrition's content.

To date, 18,000 students have used the company's offerings in schools in Florida, New York and Massachusetts. Rogoff said she's had discussions with Boston Public Schools about a partnership.

She said growth had so far been largely "organic," and that appearing at Apple offered an opportunity for the budding business to meet new KickinNutrition adopters.

"We're a really small group of passionate people who are trying to address the obesity crisis, and this is a great way to do it," Rogoff said.

Alleged Sandusky abuse victim from '80s wants trial

His complaint wasn't part of original prosecution.

A Massachusetts man who claims he was molested by former Penn State football coach Jerry Sandusky as a teenager told a Pennsylvania judge the case should be prosecuted even though the events in question date to 1988.

A lawyer for Anthony Spinelli Jr., now 43, argued that the statute of limitations — the deadline for bringing criminal charges — still had years to run in the case and that Spinelli's private criminal complaint should go forward.

"My client wants to come into court and stare down the person who did this to him," said attorney Daniel Kiss.

Lawyers for the Pennsylvania attorney general countered by saying that state law precluded a prosecution of Sandusky, who served as an assistant to legendary Penn State head coach Joe Paterno, no matter what evidence existed to support Spinelli's accusations.

"Every victim is not entitled to stare down that person," said Laura Ditka, a lawyer from the attorney general's staff. "Is there a crime that can be prosecuted?"

Judge Thomas Kistler of the Centre County Court of Common Pleas, admitted in court that the Pennsylvania statute of limitations on sex crimes was so confusing that he had his clerk draw up a chart. He said he would take the arguments under consideration and render a decision at a later date.

Sandusky is led away in handcuffs. GETTY IMAGES

Spinelli declined to comment afterward. A friend, Nick Carbone, said Spinelli was upset by the state's arguments.

Attorney General Kathleen Kane ruled in May that while Spinelli's complaint was "compelling," she believed too much time had elapsed to prosecute the case successfully.

"Every victim is not entitled to stare down that person." Ditka

In 2012, Sandusky was convicted of 45 of 48 child molestation charges filed against him, but Spinelli's case was not part of the prosecution. The former coach is serving a 30-to-60-year sentence in the state's "supermax" prison in Waynesburg.

Spinelli says he was twice molested by Sandusky in June 1988, when he was a 16-year-old standout high school quarterback from Leominster, Massachusetts, during an invitation-only Penn State football camp for young players, according to court documents.

After Sandusky's arrest in 2011, Spinelli came forward.

Although the state police found his complaint credible, the appeal brief says, then-Attorney General Linda Kelly took no action. He was not among the eight victims who testified in Sandusky's 2012 trial. Ditka said Thursday the statute of limitations problem drove Kelly's decision.

Kelly could not be reached for comment. Kane took over the post in 2013. REUTERS

Toyota, Microsoft, Chrysler among big advertisers for Yahoo stream of NFL game

Tech giant guarantees brands 3.5 million streams in United States, buyers said.

Toyota Motor Corp., Microsoft Corp. and Chrysler are among the brands that will advertise this weekend during Yahoo Inc.'s first live-streamed National Football League game, the Internet company said Thursday.

Yahoo will stream Sunday's game between the Buffalo Bills and Jacksonville Jaguars, the first time viewers around the world can watch an NFL game online ree. It kicks off in London at 2:30 p.m., or 9:30 a.m. Eastern time.

"We are completely sold out on ads," Lisa Utzschneider, Yahoo's chief revenue officer, told Reuters in an interview, adding that more than 30 brands had signed up to advertise.

Early birds in the United States can watch the pregame show starting at 8 a.m. Eastern time with commentary from Yahoo's fantasy football experts, who will also answer questions from viewers. Dairy Queen is the pregame sponsor and Toyota is the half-time sponsor.

Chrysler, Microsoft and American Express are among the brands that have bought 15- to 30-second spots during the game, Utzschneider said.

Advertisers had the option to target spots domestically or globally, meaning viewers in London, for example, may see different ads than viewers in New York, Utzschneider said.

Over the past few months, Yahoo dropped its asking price for ads during the game to less than $100,000 from $200,000, two media buyers familiar with the situation told Reuters.

While the opportunity to advertise during the game may be attractive to global brands, it is less so for U.S. brands because the game is early for West Coast viewers, and fans in the game's local markets will be able to view it on television on CBS affiliates, the sources told Reuters.

"All distribution formats are on the table for future games." Vishal Shah

Still, advertisers are interested to see how many viewers tune in and if the game results in future partnerships between the NFL and Yahoo or its competitors.

The NFL will be taking a close look at not just how many viewers watch the game, but which devices they're watching it on, the quality of the viewing experience, whether the game draws a larger share of millennial viewers and how they are using social media to talk about it, said Vishal Shah, the NFL's vice president of digital media strategy.

The league also will study viewership in various regions, he said. The game will take place in prime time in Asian markets.

The NFL has other online offerings. Game highlights and news appear on platforms such as Twitter and YouTube. Live games can be watched on various apps by customers with pay TV subscriptions. REUTERS

Controversial cyber-security bill advances in Senate

A long-delayed bill that would make it easier for corporations to share information about cyber attacks with each other or the government without fear of lawsuits advanced in the Senate with strong support from members of both parties Thursday.

Dozens of industry and business groups, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, back the Cybersecurity Information Sharing Act (CISA), saying it would encourage companies and the government to share information that might help thwart high-profile cyber attacks.

But many privacy activists and a few lawmakers, including Republican Sen. Rand Paul and Democratic Sen. Ron Wyden, vehemently oppose it.

Several big tech companies also have come out against the measure, arguing that it fails to protect users' privacy and does too little to prevent cyber attacks.

"The bill would grant legal immunity to companies who in sharing information actually violate your privacy," Paul said in the Senate shortly after the procedural vote of 83 to 14, well above the 60 "yes" votes needed to move ahead.

The Senate began debating amendments to the measure, which is on track to pass next week.

The House passed its version of CISA in April with strong support from Republicans and Democrats. REUTERS

Sweden struggles to cope with migrant tide; PM warns about threat

Europe is struggling to cope with its biggest wave of migrants since World War II.

Police officers prevent migrants from entering Croatia, in the Serbian-Croatian border, in Berkasovo. Thousands have been making their way from Turkey to the Balkans, hoping to reach Germany, Sweden and other EU states. GETTY IMAGES

Sweden said on Thursday it expected up to 190,000 migrants this year, putting unprecedented strain on a country famous for welcoming refugees but planning to house many in tents this winter.

At the opposite pole of the angry debate on the migration crisis, Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orban urged European leaders to change their immigration policies and consult voters, or face a threat to the democratic order.

Thousands of refugees continued to pour into Slovenia in the hope of reaching prosperous northern Europe, and the tiny country appealed for other European Union states to send police to help manage the flow.

According to the International Organization for Migration, more than 670,000 people have arrived by sea this year, fleeing war zones and poverty in the Middle East, Africa and Asia.

Sweden's Migration Agency said more than 30,000 of the 140-190,000 people it expected in 2015 would be unaccompanied children. Such numbers are much higher, as a proportion of Sweden's population of under 10 million, than even the 800,000-plus expected by Germany.

The agency said it would need an additional 70 billion Swedish crowns ($8.41 billion) over the next two years to cope.

More than 100,000 have already arrived in Sweden this year, topping the previous record during the Balkan wars in the early 1990s.

"We have seen pictures of people who are literally walking from Greece across the Balkans to Germany and on to Sweden."

Agency head Anders Danielsson

Nearly 10,000 came in the past week alone.

"Last night all our places were full," Danielsson said.

The Agency estimated it would face a shortage of accommodation for 25,000-45,000 migrants by the end of the year. Tens of thousands could spend the cold Swedish winter in heated tents. REUTERS

Most support NRA despite criticism after shootings

Most Americans maintain a favorable view of the National Rifle Association despite criticism and a presidential rebuke of the gun lobby after a massacre in Oregon this month, Gallup said on Thursday.

The NRA is viewed favorably by 58 percent of Americans, Gallup said. That compares with 54 percent after the December 2012 shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut, and is just 2 points below its highest showing in Gallup polls since 1989.

Another poll by Gallup, released earlier this week, showed 55 percent of Americans prefer tighter regulations on gun sales, something the NRA generally opposes. Pro-gun groups say increased background checks for gun buyers could infringe on Second Amendment rights to keep and bear arms.

After a gunman shot dead nine people at Umpqua Community College in Roseburg, Oregon, and was himself killed by police on Oct. 1, President Barack Obama angrily said the country had made a "political choice" to allow mass shootings and condemned the NRA for blocking reform of U.S. gun laws.

"Somehow this has become routine," Obama said. "We've become numb to this."

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton has said she wants to build a "national movement" to counter the influence of the NRA. REUTERS

"Jem and the Holograms" is the latest in a long line of films about all-female bands. Here are seven of the best.

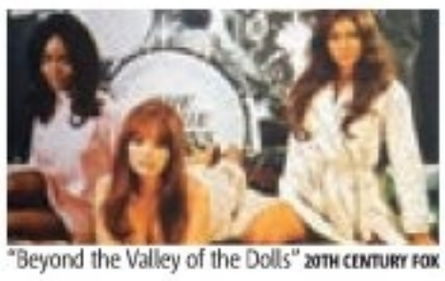
RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

On Friday, "Jem and the Holograms" — about suburban teen YouTube sensations turned pink-haired pop stars — opens in theaters. Though rumor has it the movie bears little resemblance to the truly outrageous 1980s cult cartoon series that inspired it, "Jem" does have a few things going for it: Ziggy Stardust-worthy makeup (on fleek), Juliette Lewis as an evil music manager and — most important — girls, rocking out.

Rock 'n' roll has long been a symbol of rebellion, but it's particularly subversive when played by women. Think of 1970s feminist punk trio The Slits, who were thrown out of more hotels and more feared than any of their male contemporaries, or on the pop spectrum, Madonna and Miley Cyrus, who have both inspired hand-wringing about the downfall of moral society.

That kind of power to upset and shock people is why directors keep making movies about all-girl bands. They not only have the potential to subvert Hollywood's — and the larger culture's — gender norms, combat conformity and indulge in sensationalism (drugs, lesbianism, etc.); they provide a natural vehicle to explore female friendship and identity (something sorely lacking in most films). Besides, it's exhilarating to watch a group of gals tear it up.

Whether "Jem" is worthy to join the ranks of such anarchic treasures as "Ladies and Gentlemen, the Fabulous Stains" or even "Spice World" remains to be seen. But in honor of its release — and of rebel girls everywhere — we have rounded up a few of the best movies celebrating girl power.



"Beyond the Valley of the Dolls" 20TH CENTURY FOX

'Beyond the Valley of the Dolls' (1970)

At the center of this Roger Ebert-penned sex-and-drug-fueled exploitation flick is the Carrie Nations (née the Kelly Affair), a trio of musical babes who travel to Los Angeles in search of fame. What seems on its face a morality tale (things soon spiral out of control for the gals, as is wont to happen in late '60s Hollywood) is actually a balls-out satire of celebrity, pop culture and pretty much everything we hold sacred.

"Ladies and Gentlemen, the Fabulous Stains" PARAMOUNT PICTURES

'Ladies and Gentlemen, the Fabulous Stains' (1982)

One of the best rock movies ever made, "The Stains" features a group of teenagers (including a young Diane Lane and Laura Dern) who can barely play or sing but, in true punk fashion, form a band anyway. Much to the consternation of male rock critics, they begin to use their platform to spread the gospel of feminism, inspiring young girls everywhere to dye their hair, run away from home and form their own bands. Lane's skunk-like hair and wild face paint still slay.

"Desperately Seeking Susan" ORION PICTURES

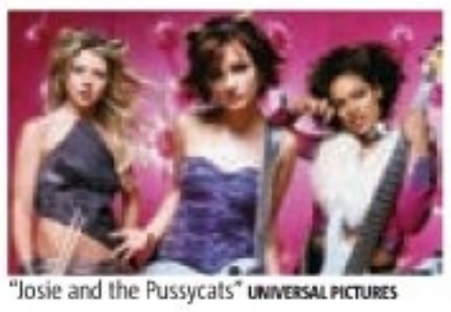
'Desperately Seeking Susan' (1985)

Though not technically a movie about a rock band, this mad caper about mistaken identities and general hell-raising is about as close to punk's anarchic spirit as you can get. Plus, its leather-clad heroines — played by Madonna (in her first film role) and Rosanna Arquette — are actually celebrated for their antics instead of chastised.

Spice World COLUMBIA PICTURES

'Spice World' (1997)

OK, hear us out: This update on the Beatles' "Hard Day's Night" featuring Scary, Baby, Sporty, Posh and Ginger getting ready for an epic concert in London, is a third-wave feminist romp, showing that these gals can party, cause a sensation and wreak havoc even better than the Fab Four.



"Josie and the Pussycats" UNIVERSAL PICTURES

'Josie and the Pussycats' (2001)

Like "Jem," this film, about a trio of girl rockers, was based on a cartoon. Though it bombed at the box office, it has become a cult classic, remembered for its sly take-down of corporate greed and conformity. The tunes — sung by '90s group Letters to Cleo — are super catchy, and it stars a wonderfully slimy Alan Cumming as the (slightly inept) villain.

"The Runaways" SONY PICTURES

'The Runaways' (2010)

Kristen Stewart plays a baby Joan Jett in this biopic about her first teen rock band, The Runaways. Part punk, part glam, the group had long been dismissed as something of a shock act due to its young members' provocative antics and innuendo-laden lyrics. Here, the talented ladies get their due.

"We Are the Best!" MAGNOLIA PICTURES

'We Are the Best!' (2014)

Two Swedish misfits want to start a punk band, so they recruit a fundamentalist Christian folkie at their school to teach them guitar. The three form an unlikely friendship, and this sweet, delightfully scrappy film chronicles the rocky road to their first messy, riot-inducing basement gig. No fame and glory, but they don't care. These girls just wanna have fun.

Elijah Wood isn't afraid of Vin Diesel

Wood plays a priest charged with aiding a fearsome assassin (Vin Diesel) in "The Last Witch Hunter." SCOTT GARFIELD

The star got to see the dorky side of his he-man co-star on "The Last Witch Hunter."

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Like his "Lord of the Rings" co-stars, Elijah Wood has the luxury of being picky. He could have settled for a string of never-ending fantasy knockoffs. Instead, like Viggo Mortensen, he's done what he wants. The last decade has seen him lending his presence to smaller and/or unusual fare: the first-person horror "Maniac"; "Open Windows," set entirely on a desktop; the TV show "Wilfred," in which he acts opposite a talking dog. Wood comes back to both big budgets and fantasy with "The Last Witch Hunter," a supersized Vin Diesel vehicle in which he plays the new priestly sidekick to the star's immortal slayer of the supernatural. He didn't take the job lightly.

First off, I should ask about Vin Diesel. He seems like he might not be as intimidating as his screen image.
He's many things. He's lovely. He's friendly to everybody. He's got a big personality. He's also kind of not intimidating. I think people would think he's intimidating. He sort of isn't. He's a softie. He's also a big D&D fan, and he's a big Tolkien nerd and a fantasy fan. In a lot of ways, this character is closer to him than anything he's done in the past. That's cool to know there's this side to him that doesn't get expressed much in cinema. But it's a big part of who he is.

What convinced you this was a worthy return to big-budget genre fare?
It's weird to even say this, because it wasn't the case 20 years ago, but it was interesting to read something that was not based on a pre-existing source or was a sequel. It's bizarre that we have to say one of a film's merits is that it's original. F—ing strange. But it is the case. So it was interesting to me that something was going to be made on this scale that was entirely original. And I was just surprised by the script. I found the mythology to be really detailed, the world-building to be really interesting.

The sets appear to be mostly real, as do many of the effects.
Some people are asking questions about what it was like to deal with the CG. In reality, it was almost imperceptible to us — save for the witch bar, where there was quite a bit of CG effects. But even there, there were a lot of practical effects. Most of the time, we were surrounded by real things. Even the sentinel at the end — there was a sentinel there. That goes a long way to making you feel rooted in the space.

Is it typical for you to get so involved with looking at all aspects of a production?
These are all questions I ask, honestly. When I read something, I want to know what the approach is, who's going to shoot it, how it's going to be shot, what is the visual tone of the film and what are the designs going to look like. I'm a nerd, so I always ask these questions.

'The Last Witch Hunter' is a crazy, dorky fever dream of weirdness

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge

In "The Last Witch Hunter," Vin Diesel is fond of fire swords, but he sometimes dispatches his supernatural beasties with guns and knives and stuff. SCOTT GARFIELD

"The Last Witch Hunter" isn't based on a book series. But it feels like it is. And perhaps it should be. It's a riot of dense, impenetrable mythology about Vin Diesel's Kaulder, a slayer cursed with immortality, "Highlander"-style, now cruising about New York City (Pittsburgh, actually), keeping a "John Wick"-ian underworld of witches in line. There's a token conspiracy involving a bearded bear of a warlock who looks like he's on break from a bluegrass band (played by Olafur Darri Olafsson), which forces Kaulder to team with a nice witch (Rose Leslie) who has the secret power of invading other people's dreams but who is also a bartender.

Weirdness gets piled on like a mile-high "Scooby Doo" sandwich. There's a blocky monster who works for a witch council. There's a witch with a Gigerian ponytail. There's Michael Caine, mostly playing a corpse. There's a tree made of gummi bears, which prompts Kaulder to growl to a kid, "Didn't your mother ever teach you not to eat candy from trees?" Probably not? The wacko keeps coming, and the world keeps expanding ever outward, like the tendrils that spring from the film's many, many pieces of tree and wood imagery. We can even see that today's modern witches are on social media.

Maybe we even succumb to the insanity. It's the only sane response. It can be freeing, even fun, to give yourself over to a film like "The Last Witch Hunter," especially because it comes from a good place. It was ushered forth by its star, a not-so-secret D&D and Tolkien nerd who actually seems to be having fun. In the last few "Fast and/or Furious" outings, he's seemed sleepy, maybe full-on narcoleptic, rarely even motivated to bust out his signature gruff howls. But in "The Last Witch Hunter," he cracks jokes, even flirts with Leslie, though she is, as always with this mostly sexless he-man, more a companion than a future ladyfriend. It has the ricketiest of foundations, but at least it's not hollow.

'Jem and the Holograms'

Director: Jon M. Chu
Stars: Aubrey Peeples, Juliette Lewis
Rating: PG

Aubrey Peeples (with "Aladdin Sane" face paint) tries to overcome the evil managerial stylings of Juliette Lewis in the "Jem and the Holograms" movie. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

A straight-faced "Josie and the Pussycats," but with a robot, the "Jem and the Holograms" movie is an earnest melodrama, and also an origin story, but also a sometime sci-fi movie, plus a YA movie, as well as a movie for the Miley/Taylor generation, and even occasionally an ad-lib-heavy comedy, because those are popular too. It's a movie about a crisis of identity: Shy teen Jerrica (Aubrey Peeples) can only sing through her titular persona, which includes pink hair and a hot red "Aladdin Sane" streak across her face. But it's also a movie with a crisis of identity.

For a while, things seem simple, even dull. Jerrica and sibs are just aspiring musicians who go viral, shuffling them into the hands of blatantly evil label owner Erica Raymond, played with copious, awe-inspiring bitchiness by Juliette Lewis. For a while, you might think an old Hasbro toon has been turned into a painfully ordinary tale of corruption in the music biz. Then comes the robot. This is a sci-fi movie too? Goofy and bleep-blooping in the George Lucas mould, he's mostly around to spice up a narrative that was being made fun of all the way back in 1970's "Beyond the Valley of the Dolls."

For a film with futuristic tech (but only two holograms), it's too often stuck in the boring real world, not the fantastical one of the show. These are all problems that can be fixed in the sequel, for this is also, on top of everything else, in its final moments a Marvel movie with a bumper touting stuff that would baffle everyone but the fans. A scene of Bill Murray playing "Smoke on the Water" for native Afghans doesn't go so well in "Rock the Kasbah." KERRY HAYES

'Rock the Kasbah'

Director: Barry Levinson
Stars: Bill Murray, Kate Hudson

Bill Murray has been an untouchable god since "Rushmore," or perhaps forever, so it's odd to think of him ever being terrible. Yet here's "Rock the Kasbah," which is a good/bad way of seeing Murray at his worst. It's him indulging in his laziest and most clueless tendencies, among them ignoring an obviously sloppy and dumb script that teems in Ugly Americanisms.

"Rock the Kasbah" is essentially "Bill Murray Goes to Afghanistan," with his scuzzy music promoter winding up in Kabul intending to put on a show; instead, he gets gunplay and jokes about foreigners. Eventually he scores a new find: an Afghan tribeswoman who has the chops to be the first woman participant on "Afghan Idol."

Murray won't let this turn into a soft-hearted "Danny Collins," but he does seem ill-advisedly game to act like a doofus in another country. And this is how a comic institution becomes actively annoying. An endless scene of him howling "Smoke on the Water" in front of confused tribesmen is a low point in the Murray canon. It makes "Larger Than Life," the elephant comedy from his pre-"Rushmore" dog days, look enticing. MP

Fans of "My So-Called Life" can catch show creator Winnie Holzman's newest work at the Huntington Theatre Company. PROVIDED

"My So-Called Life" creator Winnie Holzman heads to the Hub with a new play about abortion.

MEGAN JOHNSON
letters@metro.us

When "My So-Called" Life creator Winnie Holzman prepared to screen the pilot episode of the 1994 cult favorite before a crowd in Boston earlier this month, she wasn't sure how it was going to feel.

"I hadn't seen it in a really long time, and I wasn't sure what it was gonna be like," Holzman tells us. "It was pretty emotional. All of those people in the pilot mean a lot of to me. Some of them are in my life as close, deep friends."

One of those close friends is Claire Danes, the beloved star of "MSCL," whom Holzman had just watched get her star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. But even back when they shot the show, Holzman says it was clear Danes was meant to succeed.

"She was not just a kid," says Holzman. "We all knew. It was very clear. She was a girl wearing sneakers who loved to dance, and was definitely a star. She understood emotions and how to access them."

After having much success with "Wicked," and TV projects like "Huge," Holzman is taking to the stage. Her play "Choice" premiered last week at the Huntington Theatre Company.

The 61-year-old is well aware that while the show is comedic, it also has some dramatic moments, including its willingness to tread controversial territory with the subject of abortion. But the seasoned playwright insists the show "has a lot of layers to it," and doesn't simplify a complicated topic.

"In some ways it's about the subject of a woman's right to choose, but I'm approaching it in such a way with a lot of humor and in a way that is kind of unusual," says Holzman. "I'm looking at it from a perspective that is not a typical perspective. It's not 'Are you for it? Are you against it?'"

Holzman tunes in to 'OITNB.' JOJO WHILDEN

Her must-watch list

She may have created one of the most beloved dramas in TV history, but Winnie Holzman also has a few favorite shows she thinks are game changers in 2015:

"Orange is the New Black" "That's a show that's humanizing people that are in prison, and it's giving them a voice. It has such humor and grace."

"Girls" "Lena [Dunham] will continue to succeed."

"Homeland" [starring her protege Claire Danes]: "Of course I watch it!"

Sausage Mummies Resting in Peas

Special offer for Metro readers!

Visit www.marleyspoon.com and enter METRO30 to get $30 off your first box.

PROVIDED

Directions:

1 Prepare pastry. Preheat oven to 400°F. Bring puff pastry to room temperature. On a lightly floured surface, roll puff pastry to even out. Cut into ½-inch strips (you might have a little extra pastry).

2 Wrap mummies. Beat egg in a small bowl to make an egg wash. Using a brush (or your fingers), lightly brush pastry strips with egg wash. Use 4 strips to wrap each of the sausages, overlapping as you go, to cover most of the sausage (but don't forget to leave a space for the eyes!).

3 Bake mummies. Brush wrapped mummy dogs with egg wash and arrange on a parchment-lined rimmed baking sheet. Bake until golden brown, 20-25 minutes.

4 Make peas. Meanwhile, trim root from shallot. Halve, peel and thinly slice. Strip leaves from thyme sprigs. Heat 1 tablespoon oil in a large skillet over medium-high. Add shallot and thyme. Cook, stirring until soft, 3 minutes. Season with ground pepper and ½ teaspoon salt.

5 Finish peas and spinach. Add peas, cream cheese and ½ cup water. Bring to a simmer and stir until cream cheese is dissolved, about 3 minutes. Add spinach and ¼ cup water and cook, tossing gently, until spinach is wilted and sauce is creamy and coats the vegetables, about 2 minutes.

6 Serve. Open a small corner of a mustard or ketchup packet and dot 2 eyes on each of the mummies. Serve mummy dogs on top of peas and spinach. Enjoy!

TYLER GOURLEY

Kaskade talks about his new album, haters and what people get wrong about the EDM scene.

EMILY LAURENCE
emily.laurence@metro.us

There's a reason the first track on Kaskade's album, "Automatic," is titled "We Don't Stop." He really hasn't. His last album, "Atmosphere," was such a massive success that he's been touring nonstop since 2013.

"I usually take time off to write, and I'm in the clubs thinking about what I want to play at my next show," Kaskade (real name Ryan Raddon) says of putting together an album. "But with this one, I was writing between gigs, so it was more like, 'Everything is so loud. Maybe I [will] make something a little quieter right now and enjoy this moment.'"

That's not to say "Automatic" is only chill tracks. Kaskade's most diverse album yet, it offers plenty of up-tempo songs to keep the energy high. It also features his most collaborations to date.

"When I was writing my first record [15 years ago], nobody wanted to work with someone making electronic music," he says. "People were like, 'What is that?'"

He doesn't have that problem anymore.

Self-discovery

Kaskade, 44, discovered dance music when he was in high school and says he was drawn not only to the music but to the culture.

"I was that typical kid in high school where I was angry and didn't fit in. I went out and discovered club culture, and the people were very open and accepting."

He liked the DIY aspect of sitting with machines and manipulating music, transforming it into something new. It didn't take long for him to get hooked on creating his own sound.

Stadium tours and radio play

Kaskade routinely performs for stadium crowds, but says much of the EDM scene is still cloaked in mystery.

"That comes from being outside pop culture," he says. "I do very little press. The information isn't out there. But that's what's so fascinating. I can sell 40,000 tickets in San Francisco and still not have a song on the radio."

EDM is not just for druggies

He says he often confronts misconceptions about EDM, such as the belief that everyone in the scene is on drugs. "I have to eat clean and stay healthy in order to do this," he says.

Another misconception is that his job is as simple as clicking an iTunes playlist. "I get it in my own [Instagram] feed," he says. "I'll post a picture of one of my shows and 15,000 people will be there and someone will comment, 'Learn to do something.' Like playing an entire set or my music that I wrote? What are you saying?"

Still, he says what's most important is that people are discovering his music. "It's hard to understand this stuff. I don't blame anyone."

On touring

The performance is another element of his job as an artist that many brush off. Kaskade's shows are full-on productions, and he spends months working with graphic designers and stage designers to help bring his music to life.

"What people are seeing and experiencing as they hear the music is extremely important to me," he says. "I want people to walk away from a show being like, 'Man, I've always been a fan of Kaskade, but that was amazing. It changed me.'"

NO WAY THAT TUUKKA DESERVES ALL THE BLAME

Much of the blame for the Bruins' slow start is being placed on the back of goaltender Tuukka Rask. GETTY IMAGES

Let me get this out of the way. Tuukka Rask needs to be better.

When you allow 22 goals in your first five games and your team owns a 2-4 record, it's nearly impossible to not receive some of the blame,

Notice how I said "some" and not "all" of the blame.

You see, the whole "he-needs-to-steal-some-games-for-ya" phrase is one that's taken out of context perhaps more than any other in the hockey world. And when you have a questionable defensive depth chart like the Bruins do, I get it, you're asking your goaltender — who won the Vezina Trophy two seasons ago — to steal you some games.

But there's stealing games, and then there's attempting to manage pure chaos in your own zone. For the most part this season, the B's are dealing with the latter.

With Dennis Seidenberg out, and the failure to ever replace Johnny Boychuk or Dougie Hamilton with a top-four defenseman, expectations for Boston's blue line this season shouldn't be high. The Bruins are relying on the kids. And so far, the kids must be driving coach Claude Julien crazy.

The latest example came Wednesday night at TD Garden as the B's blew a 4-2 third-period lead and lost to the Philadelphia Flyers, 5-4, in overtime.

As Patrice Bergeron said after the loss, four goals should be enough to win you a game. Well, it should, if defenseman Kevan Miller didn't cough up a puck behind his own goal line, leading to a wide-open Claude Giroux — who cut the lead to 4-3 in the third. It gave flashbacks of Miller's Game-6 turnover behind the net in Montreal two postseasons ago. So, some things haven't changed.

The Flyers then turned to two snipes by Wayne Simmonds and Giroux to steal the win in Boston, which has led to a whole lot of finger-pointing from us outside of the organization.

I see much of that blame being placed on Rask, whose 4.40 goals-against average and 22 goals against ranks second-worst in the NHL for starting goaltenders. And as I previously mentioned, for that, you can't possibly just let him off the hook.

But if you want to get crazy, let's also point the finger at someone like fourth-liner Joonas Kemppainen, who simply got outworked by Pierre-Edouard Bellemare in front of his own net, midway through the first period against the Flyers on Wednesday.

Or let's point out that Rask made two big saves in the opening minutes of Wednesday's loss, after two brutal defensive breakdowns by Bruins defensemen. First, when Colin Miller turned the puck over behind his own net, leading to a clean shot from the left point. And then on the ensuing face-off, when a lazy chip out of the zone by winger Tyler Randell led to Flyers possession in the neutral zone and a pass up the middle to Chris VandeVelde, who split the seemingly snoozing Miller and Tommy Cross. Rask made the huge left-pad save.

Stops like that might be easy to forget when you lose the way the Bruins did to the Flyers. That's somewhat understandable, because there have certainly been some shots that we all wish Rask could have stopped this season.

So again, I'm not letting him off the hook. Not for a second. But as this season plays out, don't hide from the fact that some of these breakdowns that lead to goals are the very blueprint of failure in the NHL. I don't care who's between the pipes.

Rask needs to steal the Bruins some games, for sure. But right now, you're asking him to rob a bank.

And that never ends well.

Look out for the top matchups in NFL Week 7

One-week fantasy football players might not realize this because they have their head down grinding out lineups, but we have reached the traditional season-long fantasy halfway point. It is all downhill (or uphill) from here.

Passing Matchup Gems

1. CHARGERS VS. RAIDERS
You don't need to know the Raiders are the second-worst defense against the pass. Philip Rivers just ripped a good Green Bay Packers defense for over 500 yards. The Chargers are also back home.

2. COWBOYS VS. GIANTS
You might not trust Matt Cassel ($6,400) in his first Cowboys start, but he is facing a weak Giants secondary that has allowed the third-most passing yards this season. Cassel, Jason Witten ($5,600), Terrance Williams ($5,900) and Cole Beasley ($5,200) are options to fill out lineups with short money.

Rushing Matchup Gems

1. GURLEY VS. BROWNS
Todd Gurley ($7,400) should already be on the top of everyone's lineup list, as we wrote in Wednesday's Fantasy Class. He has made two starts in his young career and averaged over 150 yards, 25 touches and 6.2 yards per carry.

2. PETERSON VS. LIONS
The Lions are sixth-worst against the run and have allowed the second-most rushing touchdowns to fantasy backs, per FFToday.com. Adrian Peterson ($8,900) should be busy here.

Defenses vs. Bad QBs

1. REDSKINS VS. WINSTON
The Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Jameis Pick-6-ston return from their bye week against an underrated Redskins defense ranked eighth in the NFL right now. The Redskins are a value at $4,400.

2. FALCONS VS. MARIOTA
Marcus Mariota has been dealing with a knee issue, so he will not be 100 percent if he does play. Also, Dan Quinn's presence is a lot more significant than you might have imagined.

3 things to watch for as Pats take on much-improved Jets

First place in the AFC East will be on the line this Sunday in Foxboro.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

Danny Amendola gets in the face of New York's Calvin Pryor last season. GETTY IMAGES

Twice a season we are blessed with a boatload of nonsense coming out of New York, and it never seems to get old.

Those pesky Jets. Always nipping at the Patriots' ankles. Always barking at something.

And then the game happens, and although the Jets usually give the Patriots a good fight, more often than not the Pats put them back in their place. After all, Tom Brady is 21-6 over his career against them.

But this Jets week feels a little different.

For one, Rex Ryan is no longer a part of it — so naturally there's less talk. And perhaps not coincidentally, the Jets, currently 5-1 on the season, are right on the Patriots' heels and — get this — can actually take sole possession of first place in the AFC East with a win on Sunday afternoon.

1 THE REVIS FACTOR

Darrelle Revis will always hold a small place in Patriots' fans hearts after the one season he played in New England, in which the Patriots won Super Bowl XLIX. They don't win without him. But he left for supposedly greener pastures over the offseason, choosing to go back to the Jets. Revis has three interceptions on the season and leads one of the best defenses in the league. He's also known to cause Tom Brady fits. Revis could very well take away Julian Edelman on Sunday.

2 GO GET FITZ

If you're only as good as your quarterback is, then don't expect the Jets to go super far this season. Ryan Fitzpatrick is a serviceable QB. But he's yet to eclipse 300 yards in any game this year, and in three of his five games he's thrown for under 250 yards. He's also thrown seven interceptions this season. Sure, he's doing what it takes to win games, but this is a guy the Patriots defense should be able to handle with relative ease. One concern: Jets wide receiver Brandon Marshall stands at 6-foot-4 and has a pretty big height advantage over the 5-foot-11 Malcolm Butler. Butler may need some safety help.

3 WATCH THE BLITZ

The Todd Bowles-led Jets blitz a ton. A beat-up New England offensive line is going to need plenty of tight end help on Sunday. Brady will also need to again showcase his quick release. "They want to be aggressive," Brady said. "They don't want to be dictated to. They want to see if you can block them. They've got a lot of good rushers."

5 DAY LIQUIDATION EVENT - ENDS MONDAY!

NOTICE

Massachusetts Reprocessed Car Sale

Cars, Trucks, Minivans, Conversion Vans and Sport Utility Vehicles

ENDS MONDAY! To Be Sold this Week in Abington ENDS MONDAY!

ABINGTON, MA - This week a consignment of bank repossessions, fleet vehicles and dealer overstocks will be eliminated in what could be the largest used car sales event in Massachusetts history.

Truck loads of reprocessed cars, trucks, minivans, and sport utility vehicles from around the Northeast have been assembled on the property of Midway Auto, 411 Brockton Ave. (Route 123), in Abington for this special event, with over 200 vehicles to choose from.

During this sale, anyone can take deliver as financing will not be a problem. Local banks, finance companies and credit unions have agreed to help buyers finance these vehicles regardless of past credit history. Simply sign and drive with $0 down and take on low monthly payments with your approved credit.

According to Mr. Dave Bingham, Event Finance Director, over $5 million in credit will be available. Because' all of the vehicles will be sold below the Kelley Blue Book value, little to no down payment will be necessary to obtain preferred financing. Even buyers with less than perfect credit will be able to obtain on-the-spot, credit approval. This is a great opportunity to get a great price and get the best financing terms available.

Mr. Michael Deveney and Mr. Gary Stone, Event Coordinators, say that "We will help the banks and finance companies by selling these vehicles. Banks would prefer selling to the general public at a great price rather than taking them to private auctions where car dealers buy them, then turn around and sell them for thousands more."

Special elimination vehicles will be clearly marked with two prices. The first price is the Kelley Blue Book retail price. This is the price that you would expect to sec if you went used car shopping at local car dealers. The second price is the drastically reduced elimination price. This is the price that the vehicle will be sold for. This type of pricing will make it quick and easy to find the car you want at a price you can afford.

The selection of cars, trucks, vans, and sport utility vehicles will be huge. These vehicles are in premium condition, many with factory warranties still in effect. Buyers will find best selling Chryslers, Jeeps, Fords, Chevrolets, Dodges, Buicks, Lincoln's, Mercury's and Cadillac's, as well as popular imports like Kia, Hyundai, Honda, Toyota, Nissan, Mitsubishi, Suzuki, Isuzu, and Volkswagen. In fact there will be approximately 75 vehicles priced below $10,000 to choose from.

Real bargain hunters and do-it-your-selfers will find the special economy section of interest with cars priced below $4,995. Trade-ins will not be a problem during this special sale. Just bring in your title, registration and proof of insurance, and let the event representative take care of the rest.

If you or anyone that you know is in the market for a good used car, then you need to make plans to attend this special sale this week.
